SOPHIA AND JACOB TOP LIST OF POPULAR BABY NAMES FOR 2011

Reuters

Move over, Isabella. Sophia is the new top baby girl's name in the U.S., according to a list of popular names of 2011 released Monday by the Social Security Administration.

The girl's name that made the biggest jump up the list was Briella, which was ranked 891st in 2010 and 497th in 2011. A possible reason is reality star Briella Calafiore from "Jerseylicious" and "Glam Fairy."

For boys, Brantley was the biggest climber, from 736th in 2010 to 320th in 2011. Social Security officials say it's a tossup as to whether that was inspired by University of Florida quarterback John Brantley or country singer Brantley Gilbert ("Country Must Be Country Wide.")

Elvis had fallen off the top 1,000 list in 2010, but he's back on at 904. That's good news to Social Security Commissioner Michael Astrue.

"Last year I was all shook up when Elvis dropped way down below the top 1,000, but Elvis is back into the promised land of the top 1,000, and that's all right," Astrue said in a statement.

How to survive NATO via the CTA

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz

» tswartz@tribune.com
» @tracyswartz

With the NATO summit downtown Sunday and Monday, don't let the political discourse get you off course.

Some road shut-downs have been announced, but some roads will close intermittently for motorcades, so it's best to take the train instead of the bus this weekend.

Going Public recommends avoiding traveling downtown if possible, but if you must go, here are some tips for your trips.

Stay on track

The CTA has posted scheduled reroutes for 20 bus lines, mostly those that travel along the lakefront, at transitchicago.com/nato. For unscheduled reroutes, tune into the CTA's Twitter feed, @cta.

Bus Tracker and trip planners only provide information for scheduled routes, not reroutes. For questions about reroutes and service, the CTA said it is extending its customer service call center hours. Riders can call 1-888-968-7282 between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. on Saturday and Sunday.

Keep in the Loop

The CTA has been performing intermittent track maintenance in the Loop during weekends this past month. There will be no Loop track work this weekend, the CTA said.

Meet the Metra riders

Metra riders will see station closures and enhanced security measures along the Electric District Line, which travels between the South Side and downtown. Metra recom-

Workers set up barricades downtown for NATO. TRIBUNE

mends riders take the No. 3 King Drive bus as an alternative, but there already are three summit reroutes posted on the CTA website for the No. 3 route.

Metra riders should consider taking the Red Line.

Transportation Cub

The Cubs play the Sox at Wrigley Field on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Red Line trains—typically packed for Cubs games—are generally even more crammed for Cubs-Sox games. Add additional traffic related to the NATO summit, and some riders will be putting the “cross” in Crosstown Classic.

Try to be patient waiting for Red Line trains or try to avoid it altogether. If the weather is nice, take the Brown Line to Belmont and walk to the field. In some cases, driving may be easier. For $6, fans can park their cars at a DeVry University parking lot, off Addison Street and Western Avenue, and take a shuttle to Wrigley.

TALK TO US

Wednesday marks Forrest Claypool's first year in office as CTA president. How would you rate his inaugural year? Send an email to tswartz@tribune.com. Please include your full name, age and neighborhood.

REPORT CARD

Generally, Chicago approves of M-Rahm

Chicago Tribune

Chicagoans generally approve of Mayor Emanuel's job performance but are taking a wait-and-see attitude on whether he's making the city a better place to live, a new Tribune/WGN-TV poll shows.

Voters also are sharply split on the question of whether Emanuel has ushered in a new era of reform as he promised during his extensive campaign for mayor.

Emanuel's inauguration a year ago Wednesday marked a notable period of transition for the Chicago area after the 22-year reign of Richard M. Daley. The new mayor promised a transformation, and a slight majority of city voters like the job Emanuel has done so far.

The poll found 52 percent of Chicago voters saying they approved of Emanuel's job performance, compared with 29 percent who disapproved and an additional 20 percent who had no opinion. The survey of 700 Chicago voters was conducted May 2-10 and has an error margin of 3.7 percentage points—more for subgroups.

Whites, wealthier voters and men gave Emanuel the highest marks.

More than 6 out of 10 white voters approve of the mayor's job performance, compared with only 1 in 5 who disapprove.

African-American voters were more divided. Less than half—44 percent—said Emanuel deserved good marks for job performance while 33 percent said he did not. Among Latino voters, 49 percent approved of Emanuel's actions as mayor while 30 percent disapproved.

The poll also found a gap for Emanuel among income levels. About half of voters earning $100,000 or less had a favorable view of his job skills, compared with 62 percent of those earning more than $100,000. And only 20 percent of wealthier voters surveyed disapprove of the wealthy mayor's job performance.

Emanuel's reputation as a hard-charging and less-than-humble political operative also may have created a slight gender issue. While 56 percent of men approve of the job he has done, only 48 percent of women have the same opinion. About the same percentage of men and women—just under 30 percent—disapprove of his actions as mayor.

Politicians strive for a job-approval rating of greater than 50 percent as a show of potential political strength at election time. Daley routinely had job-approval scores of greater than 60 percent until voters began to grow tired and dissatisfied during the last decade. By July 2010, only 37 percent of voters approved of the job Daley was doing while 47 percent disapproved.

While Emanuel doesn't face an election until 2015, his decisions the next couple of years on items ranging from challenges in Chicago Public Schools to taxes and the city's economy will help determine his political viability.

Mayor Emanuel, standing outside City Hall, marks one year in office Wednesday.

Victim of flesh-eating bacteria is optimistic

5 AUGUSTA, Ga. A 24-year-old woman in a hospital bed fighting off flesh-eating bacteria has to be told repeatedly—each time she wakes up—what has happened, her parents told CNN on Monday.

The medication Aimee Copeland is given leads her to forget each time she falls asleep.

"It's scary to her," said her mother, Donna Copeland. She asks where she is and "doesn't understand."

Yet Aimee Copeland—who has lost a leg and part of her abdomen to the virulent bacteria and may lose more, including her fingers—is keeping her spirits strong, her father said.

"We really don't see the suffering side of it. We see the miraculous survival," Andy Copeland said. "I think that's the story that's inspired us, that's the story that's inspired, I think, the nation at this point."

On Facebook, he wrote that doctors have used words like "astounding," "confounding" and "mind-boggling" to describe the young woman's recovery.

The master's student in psychology at the University of West Georgia was out with friends May 1 near the Little Tallapoosa River, about 50 miles west of Atlanta, when she grabbed onto a homemade zip line. It snapped.

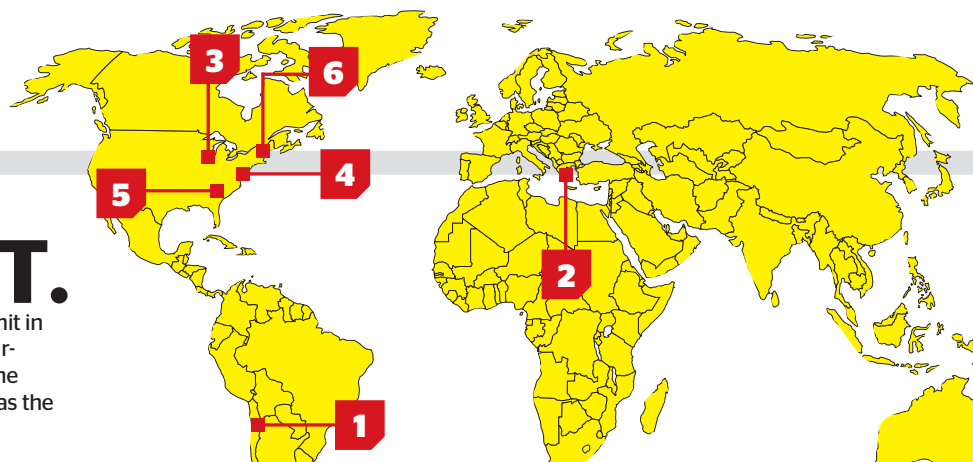

The accident left her with a gash in her left calf that took 22 staples to close.

Three days later, when the pain continued, a friend took her to an emergency room, where she was diagnosed with necrotizing fasciitis and flown to Augusta for surgery.

She had contracted the flesh-devouring Aeromonas hydrophila. The bacterium is "remarkably common in the water and in the environment," according to Dr. Buddy Creech, an assistant professor of pediatric infectious diseases at Vanderbilt University.

Derrick Rose after his ACL injury
MCT

THE ROSE PROBLEM

Team USA will miss Bulls star—and his injury delays roster announcement

Chicago Tribune

DALLAS Mike Krzyzewski loves Derrick Rose. He would have loved coaching him even more this summer.

Of course, one fateful jump stop and a torn ACL preempted that from occurring as the Bulls guard entered a different kind of player pool in the ramp-up to the London Summer Olympics: Surefire members of Team USA eliminated from competition thanks to injury.

And the program's coach and top executive didn't minimize what they'll miss.

"I love Derrick," Krzyzewski said Monday at the Team USA media summit. "He helped us win a world championship in Istanbul. He's our starting point guard. I thought he grew a lot from that experience. He's somebody in the future I know will be a point guard for our Olympic team."

"He's a team player; no one pushes the ball down the court any quicker than he does. He can be an outstanding defensive player. Our hearts go out to him. It was a big loss for our team."

Indeed, as USA Basketball chairman

Jerry Colangelo pointed out, Rose was a prime example of following the select team path—younger players chosen to practice against the Team USA veterans, who eventually can slide into primary roles within the program.

"That's part of our pipeline," Colangelo said. "And here's the results of that team and what happened: Derrick Rose after winning the world championship became the MVP. Kevin Durant was the leading scorer in the league. [Russell] Westbrook and Durant and [Kevin] Love made the All-Star team."

"Tyson Chandler had a career year, and on and on. No injuries. They were ready for their NBA seasons and had outstanding years. So it's a sad thing for Derrick. Hopefully it's only a bump."

Rose's injury, in fact, was part of the reason USA Basketball received an extension to settle on a roster. That ACL tear plus injuries to the likes of Orlando's Dwight Howard provoked the need for more evaluation time, and the crew sent to London now will become official July 7 instead of June 18.

TAJ GETS THE CALL

Bulls forward Taj Gibson reportedly has been named to the U.S. select team, which works out with and scrimmages against finalists for the U.S. national team vying to compete in the London Olympics. The news was reported by Matt Steinmetz of CSNBayArea, citing sources.

Gibson averaged 7.7 points, 5.3 rebounds and 1.3 blocks for the Bulls this season.

Landing on the select team also is seen as entering the pipeline of the national program, increasing Gibson's chances for further international play. TRIBUNE

This week the team that plays in the nicer, newer ballpark in town visits the team that has been relying on nostalgia—not wins—to sell tickets for the past 100 or so years.

Which begs the question: Why do Cubs fans continue to put up with Wrigley's shortcomings?

Put it this way. Imagine you're out on a date at an expensive restaurant.

The maitre d' greets you at the door with a condescending sneer before waiting an hour and a half to seat you. The faded wood floor creaks beneath you as you stride uneasily to your table. Sure it's a corner booth, but it's big enough for four only people at best despite the fact that tonight it will be seating eight.

Once the food arrives, the taste is subpar at best and certainly no better than what you'd find at your local Five Guys. Only instead of paying $10 apiece for this mediocre dining experience, you're paying $300 and there's a line of people around the block just dying to do the same.

You probably wouldn't go back, would you?

That's what most of us are doing as we make our annual summer pilgrimage to the corner of Clark and Addison, shelling out hundreds of our hard-earned ducats to watch mediocre baseball in a crumbling relic.

The mere idea this past offseason of the Cubs playing the 2013 season across town at the newer, nicer Cell suddenly transformed the drunken fans who populate the bleachers into self-righteous prophets and preachers. "Wrigley is sacred!" they cried, "A Cubs home game at the Cell would be blasphemy!"

Probably not.

The baseball would be just as mediocre, the beer just as cold and the uniforms just as crisp and pinstriped as they've been for generations. The sightlines, however, would be cleaner, a seat in the upper deck wouldn't require a Sherpa to guide you up a maze of ramps, and you wouldn't have to worry about concrete falling on your head. Imagine that.

Give the old girl a break in 2013 to come back better than ever in 2014. Let the construction crews rebuild the inside, exorcise whatever curse lies within. It's for the best, Chicago.

Boomer Esiason says Cowher would un-retire to coach Bears

RedEye

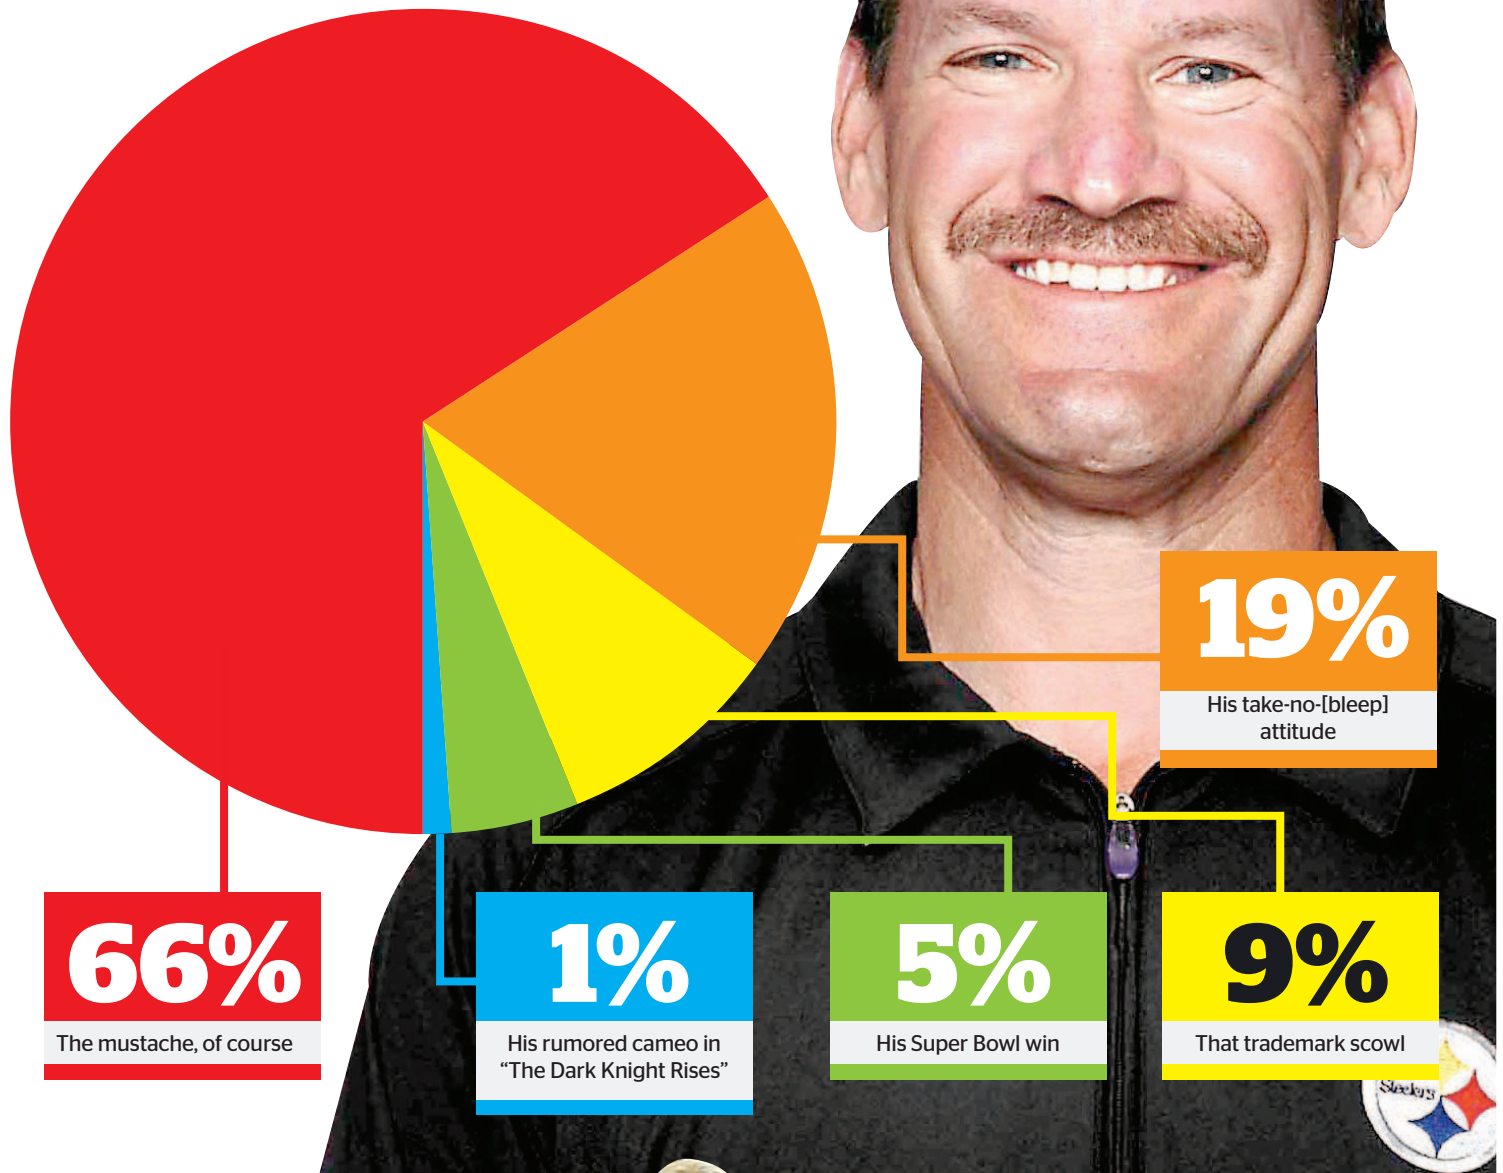

For Bears fans, this will be music to your ears.

NFL analyst and former quarterback Boomer Esiason said on Chicago radio Monday that former coach Bill Cowher would come out of retirement if the Bears job were open.

"The only two coaching spots that I think that he would ever come out of retirement for ... one would be the New York Giants and the other one would be the Chicago Bears, because he's that type of guy," Esiason said on "The McNeil and Spiegel Show" on WSCR-AM 670.

Bears fans for years have yearned for Cowher to lead the Monsters of the Midway.

And why is that? We have the unscientific pie chart breaking down his appeal.

Quarterback Tim Tebow hasn't even taken a snap yet for the N.Y. Jets, but he's the subject of an E! 30-minute special that will air in July. "Tebow is a pop culture phenomenon, and the interest of his life expands beyond the world of sports," an E! spokesperson told Sports Illustrated. "He's a compelling personality and has a fascinating story."

Return of the Finch

Former Bandits pitcher Jennie Finch will make her triumphant return to Chicago on June 9, when she will sign autographs before the game at The Ballpark in Rosemont and then watch as her retired jersey is unveiled on the center-field wall. Finch retired after the 2010 season.

Rock 'n' droll

Tenacious D aims to revive hard rock with 'Fenix'

Reuters

To hear Tenacious D tell it, hard rock music is dead and they plan to resurrect it. That's no joke.

The comedy-rock duo, formed 18 years ago by actors Jack Black and Kyle Gass, drop their third album, "Rize of the Fenix," on Tuesday aiming to save what they see as a dying musical genre.

Six years after their last album, "The Pick of Destiny," they claim to be bringing back "the majesty and the genius" of hard rock while exploring deeper, darker themes on their album. And despite what they see as a bias against their music by some critics because they mix satirical comedy with song, they are completely serious about their newest endeavor.

"Thank God for The D, riding in on their white stallions to rescue rock and roll," Black said. "What killed it? Was it Axl Rose in the library with a wrench, or was it Lady Gaga in the pantry with the pliers? We don't know but we'll figure it out."

The title track, "Rize of the Fenix" is a rousing country rock-themed ode to the band's attempt to "rise again" that expresses Tenacious D's desire for a chart-topping song, while Black's favorite, "Senorita," is a Mariachi-style tale of a damsel in distress named Conchita.

"We've dug deep for a lot of the jams, such as 'Throw Down,' our major anti-organized religion song, and 'Senorita,' a story about a man who falls in love with a woman who can't let go of her abusive relationship. It doesn't sound funny ... we're exploring some deeper, darker material," Black said.

But there is comedy. After all, what would Tenacious D be without a sense of humor? The songs are divided up by skits such as "Flutes and Trombones," which features Black and Gass getting into a fight over instruments, while "Classical Teacher" sees Gass getting classical guitar lessons.

Still, Black and Gass say they have serious ambitions to crack the mainstream music market, and they have sought advice from Dave Grohl of the Foo Fighters on how to write a hit song.

"I've always wanted to have one of those hits on the radio, but we haven't really been able to crack that code," Gass said. "I think we're trying this time a lot."

Black is adamant their third album is "in all seriousness, better than any album out there right now."

"In a hundred years' time, no one will remember Gotye or the rest, but the shining beacon of The D—they're going to start religions after us."

SUMMER MUSIC PREVIEW

ALBUMS YOU'LL BE TALKING ABOUT

No, we didn't feel the need to preview summer's biggest albums just because Tenacious D is back. But the next few months pack plenty of highly anticipated releases, including Fiona Apple, Nas and a full-length from Kimbra, the promising female voice on Gotye's "Somebody That I Used To Know," and a new Smashing Pumpkins effort, recorded during Billy Corgan's break from wrestling. Here are 12 albums RedEye's Sound Board can't wait to hear. For more, go to redeyechicago.com.

MAY 22
Born and Raised

John Mayer

Ask 100 people on the street, and few probably would admit to liking John Mayer's music. But he knows how to write a hit that will at least melt some hearts, college-age or older. —MATT PAIS

Vows

Kimbra

The 22-year-old New Zealand singer isn't just the backup on Gotye's "Somebody That I Used to Know." If you've heard Kimbra's terrific 2011 EP "Settle Down," you're excited to hear what multifaceted pop tricks she pulls out of her hat on a full-length. —M.P.

MAY 29
Here

Edward Sharpe and the Magnetic Zeros

Two singles already released from these folkies show very different sounds: "That's What's Up" is raucous and has the same adorable peace-and-love-for-everyone feeling of "Home" from the band's debut album, while frontman Alex Ebert is Johnny Cash-esque and emotional in "Man on Fire." —SARA STEWART

The Stoned Immaculate

Curren$y

Do you like thumping tracks and clever wordplay that may or may not be about different types of juice and marijuana? If so, the eighth(!!!) studio album from Curren$y should be right up your alley. —ERNEST WILKINS

JUNE 12
Looking 4 Myself

Usher

The title hints at a more introspective Usher, but "Raymond vs. Raymond" did as well, and we ended up with disposable hits such as "OMG." Let's hope Usher rediscovers the magic of past work like "Yeah!" or we'll be forced to turn to the sickeningly catchy work of his protégé, Justin Bieber. —BRIAN MOORE

JUNE 19
The Idle Wheel Is Wiser ...

Fiona Apple

Fiona Apple's still a bit tortured, a lot anguished and has more to say than ever. If the first single, "Every Single Night," is any indication, this is going to be Apple's best work yet. Oh, and the album's full title is "The Idle Wheel Is Wiser Than The Driver Of The Screw And Whipping Cords Will Serve You More Than Ropes Will Ever Do." —JESSICA GALLIART

Oceania

Smashing Pumpkins

What's Billy Corgan—er, Smashing Pumpkins—been up to in the latest stages of the epic concept record "Teargarden by Kaleidyscope," besides starting pro wrestling leagues and cheering on the Cubs? Better yet, will "Oceania" be offered free like the rest of the songs that have comprised "Teargarden?" —B.M.

JUNE 26
Overexposed

Maroon 5

Adam Levine and crew know how to make a pop song. After "Moves Like Jagger" sold 7 million records, there's a pretty good chance they're going to neuter the crap out of this record in an attempt to go sextuple-diamond. All we're saying? Don't expect "Songs about Jane." —E.W.

JULY 17
Life is Good

Nas

What's left when you're already a Top 5 dead-or-alive rap legend? How about a celebration of all things fun? Whether it be reminding you he can rap his butt off ("Nasty") or reflecting on having a daughter ("Daughters"), he's showing us how it's done. —E.W.

JULY 3
Fortune

Chris Brown

He's not a good person. He doesn't make good albums. He's included here because you know there will be at least two or three singles from the record on the radio, and hopefully they're as irresistible as "Yeah 3X." —M.P.

AUG. 21
Hot Cakes

The Darkness

The great thing about The Darkness is—was?—that they were in on the joke. They were Steel Panther before there was a Steel Panther. We were laughing along with them. As long as the reformed rockers can hang on to that, we're with them all the way. —B.M.

Rhythm and Repose

Glen Hansard

Hansard's first solo album comes three years after his last Swell Season love lullabye with Marketa Irglova, "Strict Joy." Whether this album will be quiet and controlled like that record, or bombastic and Irish rockin' like his work with The Frames remains to be seen; new single "Love Don't Leave Me Waiting" leans more toward the former, but "Take The Heartland" from the "Hunger Games" soundtrack is loud and fiddle-filled. —DANA MORAN

TRAVEL COMPANIONS

P-cubed pants

$99.95 for business traveler version,
$109.95 for adventure pants;
both at clothingarts.com

What they are: A line of adventure and business pants that are pickpocket-proof
How they work: Large pockets with zipers and buttons make unauthorized access difficult, if not impossible. The front pockets not only are zippered, but each has a button flap for extra security. What's more, there's a pocket within each pocket that is perfect for a cellphone. There are six exterior pockets as well as a seventh that attaches for carrying a water bottle. And they're all secure.

The good: We tried the adventure version, made of a soft cotton-nylon blend in either green or gray (there's also a business traveler version, made of twill and in khaki or brown) and coated with Teflon fabric protection. The real comfort test is how the pants fare at full capacity. We loaded them up and found them quite comfortable and not clown-pants bulky.

The bad: You might have trouble remembering where you stashed your stuff. TRIBUNE

shop

Travalo Excel

$19.99 at travalo.com

What it is: A refillable, aircraft-grade aluminum spray container for traveling with your favorite perfume or cologne without risking confiscation by the Transportation Security Administration. Travalo makes a few models, including the Excel, which holds about 65 sprays if filled to the max, keeping you far below the 3-ounce TSA threshold for carry-on luggage.

How it works: Pull the atomizer tip off the spray bottle of your favorite scent, place the Travalo fill valve against the bottle's exit tube and push down repeatedly until the Travalo is loaded with the amount of scent you want to take on the road.

The good: It's a handsome, nicely made travel item. We expected it to leak just a bit, but there was no such problem. It's so small, about the size of lipstick, that you won't be adding to your baggage burden.

The bad: If your perfume or cologne isn't in a spray bottle, there's no way to get it into the Travalo unless you transfer it to some kind of spray bottle that will mate with the Travalo.

WHO'S NEXT?

They might not sell photos for big bucks, but there are plenty of stars still expecting little ones this year. Simpson's ex, Nick Lachey, and wife Vanessa announced their baby will be born in late summer or early fall, and Kourtney Kardashian's second baby with Scott Disick, a girl, is due in July.

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Brand-new celebrity parents get to bring home more than just a new bundle of joy. Jessica Simpson, who already scored with a maternity line for Destination Maternity and a $3 million endorsement deal with Weight Watchers, is taking home $850,000 from People magazine for pics of Maxwell Drew, eonline.com reports. Strangely, this sounded a little ... low ... to us. Check out how much other celebs made off their newborns—and how they used the cash. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

Jessica Simpson's photo sale price sounds a bit low, see how it compares ...

BEYONCE AND JAY-Z We guess they've probably got enough cash already. Jay and Bey chose to show off Blue Ivy on their own terms, dropping off baby pics on a Tumblr account on a random Friday afternoon along with a short thank-you note to fans.

$500,000

BRITNEY SPEARS AND KEVIN FEDERLINE

Hey, y'all! Brit and Kevin welcomed their first son, Sean Preston, in 2005. In a hilarious coincidence, the People magazine cover also teased to Christina Aguilera's wedding planning.

How they spent it: Donated it to victims of Hurricane Katrina

Simpson has been offered $850,000 for baby pictures from People

$1.5 million

CHRISTINA AGUILERA AND JORDAN BRATMAN

People paid her THREE TIMES as much as Britney for photos of son Max hangin' out in the nursery with his proud parents in 2008.

$6 million

JENNIFER LOPEZ AND MARC ANTHONY

People magazine again! When the 2008 cover was released, the cash was the most ever paid out for baby photos. Twins Max and Emmeline must've been worth it.

How they spent it: "We gave a little bit [to charity] and I saved the rest for them," Jen told The Daily Beast.

TOM CRUISE AND KATIE HOLMES

Call it the pre-Babyoncel leak. Instead of the Internet, Tom and Katie got photos of Suri out the old-fashioned way in 2006: by giving the rights to Vanity Fair for free. Of course they also got a whole bunch of baby pics by Annie Leibovitz out of the deal, so everybody wins.

$4.1 million

ANGELINA JOLIE AND BRAD PITT

Hollywood's hottest couple stays that way by raking in the big bucks for photos of Shiloh, their first biological baby. People magazine coughed up the cash for the 2006 cover rights.

How they spent it: Donated it to an African charity

$14 million

ANGELINA JOLIE AND BRAD PITT

These two again! Apparently twins Knox and Vivienne, born in France in 2008, were worth more than twice as much as Shiloh to People magazine. Wonder how they explained to Shiloh that she's the cheap sister.

How they spent it: The current holders of the baby-photo price tag record also donated this cash to charity.

Festival of POTUS

Jay-Z told Rolling Stone he'll ask President Obama to dust off his Al Green rendition for the rapper's Made in America music fest in Philly this Labor Day weekend. He doesn't expect much from the invite, though. "He probably won't have time, but I'm absolutely going to ask him," Jay said. Good luck with that one ...

He's Ron Burgundy?

If you've been waiting for your first glimpse of "Anchorman 2," there will be a teaser trailer for the sequel on "The Dictator," which opens Wednesday. Burgundy tweeted, "I don't know what a teaser trailer is either but they say you all will. When did the world get so crazy? I'm having a scotch."

First fete

Mariah Carey and Nick Cannon's twins Moroccan and Monroe turned 1 recently, and the celebration was exactly how we would have guessed. The couple posted photos of the event on their website for the twins, dembabies.com, showing the formal outfits the family donned (black tie for Moroccan, tuxedo for Nick, gowns for Mariah and Monroe), as well as some of their birthday haul. Included in the gifts were matching red toy Ferraris, a rocking horse and a miniature white baby grand piano. Of course.

Anna Faris

What's up for Anna Faris after her role in "The Dictator"? Well, she and her husband, "Parks and Rec" actor Chris Pratt, are expecting a baby, according to vulture.com. But when it comes to acting, Faris tells Vulture she's all for switching it up from her typical comedic stylings. "I like the idea of sort of playing quieter roles, which would be refreshing for a minute," she said. "It is exhausting being really loud and obnoxious."
